THE CHINA MAIL.

HONGKONG, FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 1877.

steadily increasing business year by year. Our earnings for 1876 exceed those for 1875 by $33,000. There is no doubt that this will be very satisfactory to the shareholders, but perhaps to some of you the return now made on your contributions may seem not very gratifying. I can assure you that this has not arisen from any fault of ours, but from sheer misfortune. As recently as December and January last we faced very well indeed with almost all the risks we had taken, but I regret to say just at the close of our accounts, some heavy losses came upon us, amongst which I may mention the steamer Paradise, a first class steamer, from Saigon, to this Colony with a cargo of rice, which has, as you are aware, not been heard of since it departed from the port of despatch. The other is the Ambarosa, also a first class steamer, from Calcutta to Bombay, that collided with another vessel and was lost on the coast of India. There is likewise the sailing ship Kate Gregory, also a first class risk, which sailed from Calcutta to Galle, and has not been heard of. Gentlemen, by these we have sustained a net loss of something like $60,000. If it were not for such heavy losses, you would have received upwards of 20 per cent return on your contributions and your Reserve Fund would have shown an additional increase of $20,000. However, I have every hope that with your support, the result of our workings for the present year will be much more encouraging when we appear before you this time next year. I have nothing more to add, and should be glad to answer any question.

Nobody was disposed to ask any question, and Mr. Bellis proposed the adoption of the Report and Statement of Accounts. This was seconded by Mr. Reimers and was unanimously carried.

Mr. André next proposed the re-election of Messrs O. M. Kerr, Lee Tuk Cheong and Fung Tang as Directors, and the confirmation of the appointment by the Board of Messrs O. Hoffman Burrows and T. Pim, as Directors. This was seconded by Mr. Jameson and unanimously carried. The re-election of Messrs A. Molner and L. Hauschild as Auditors was next proposed by Mr. O. M. Kerr, seconded by Mr. O. H. Burrows. Carried unanimously.

This closed the business of the meeting

Police Intelligence.

(Before the Hon. C. May.)

Feb. 28, 1877.

CHURCHSTEALING.

Ngai A-ye, an old man of 61 years of age, was charged with stealing a female child aged 4 years. The prisoner was seen to lead the child on Sowman Road and the child was crying. The two Chinese constables who saw it suspected the man, but allowed him to go on, while they returned to Causeway Bay and made enquiries. They found the guardian of the child, who claimed it as the child of her sister. It was playing outside the door when missed. Pursuit was given, and when the party arrived at Chut Chee Moey, they saw the prisoner still leading the child on the road. As soon as he saw the police, he took up the child in his arms and ran up the hill. He was, however, caught, and was sent to six months.

ASSAULT.

John Martin, private H.M. 28th Regiment, was charged by Yip A Sow, a bar-boy at the Seamen's Club, with assault. The defendant went there to get a drink, and when it was refused him because he was not a member, he threw down a pack of cards and struck the complainant. Fined 50 cents.

SUPREME COURT.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

(Before His Lordship Mr. Justice Snowden.)

2nd March, 1877.

In the matter of the bankruptcy of E. Grolor, a lithographer, the bankrupt appeared to pass his last examination.

Mr. Donny appeared for the bankrupt, and Mr. Wotton, on behalf of a judgment creditor, Mr. Favre, appeared to oppose.

Mr. Donny said he appeared for the bankrupt, and Mr. Wotton he understood, appeared for an opposing creditor. Mr. Favre, the keeper of the Hotel de l'Univers, who had obtained judgment in a recent action against the bankrupt. Now he did not for a moment question Mr. Favre's claim, but he would mention that out of the sum claimed, the large amount of $120.20 was incurred for billiards and drinks in the plaintiff's hotel, and Mr. Favre knew at the time the debt was incurred that the bankrupt could not pay it. He came up here from Saigon to start business as a lithographer, and he was a skillful hand at that line. He had hoped to be able to pay off his debts gradually from the earnings in his business, but he was pressed by Mr. Favre so that he had to come to this Court to apply for protection. He had filed his accounts, and although he did not keep them in such a regular manner as a large merchant would, he had kept them fairly, and they would show that he had paid away all the money he had earned.

Mr. Wotton said he appeared for the opposing creditor, Mr. Favre, who had brought an action against the bankrupt for a large amount. He obtained a judgment against him and it was arranged that he was to pay the money in instalments. He did not, however, fulfil his promise to pay, and Mr. Favre had to take out an execution against him. The Judge then suggested another course being taken, and the plaintiff in compliance with the suggestion, allowed him to be discharged for about a month, when it was found that he was dissipating his money among his creditors. Now the Bankruptcy law was for the protection of the creditors as well as for the unfortunate tradesman. He would show that the bankrupt was not entitled to that protection. He came here in November 1876 from Saigon, and he carried with him a very bad character. He had been before the Criminal Sessions there.

Mr. Donny objected to any reference being made of anything in Saigon, he had been before the Court there for libel, but what took place in Saigon was outside the matter now before the Court.

His Lordship upheld the objection. Mr. Wotton continued and said the accounts put in by the bankrupt were very incorrect. He had every opportunity given him to pay the debt and was not put in prison by Mr. Favre, until three or four months after judgment was given against him, and it was done when he disobeyed the order of the Court in not paying the instalments as he promised to do. He led a very disreputable life, having been frequently in the company of gay European women, and he sometimes had them in his house at night creating riots. There was one peculiar feature about the accounts filed, the amount of receipts every month was exactly the same as the amount of expenditure, there was no balance carried, and this would make it appear that the accounts had been "cooked."

Examined by Mr. Wotton, the bankrupt deposed as follows:—I came here on 27th November 1876. I went to live at the Hotel de l'Univers, kept by Mr. Favre. I commenced business a few days after my arrival. The first house I had business in was 31 Queen's Road upper floor. I paid $55 a month rent. The rooms were furnished. I had the floor for six months, and I had paid $110, $220 being still due. The first business I had in August. The books produced were brought by me from Saigon. I did not buy them of Chee Sing in December. I bought some books of him, but these were not the books. I know every one of the European prostitutes here. I have spoken to only one of them. She often came to my house; I can't say how many times. I have never paid her money; she never had any wine at my expense. I don't owe her any money. When she came she had wine in my house. Two of the books produced were bought in Hongkong. I know the man I saw, Chee Sing. I don't remember that I bought them of him in December 1876. I did not swear in a case in the Summary Court on one occasion that I did not keep any books. (After much pressing, he admitted that the books were bought in December last.) I kept a book in August last and transferred the entries into one of the new books. I have not got that old book now, perhaps I have destroyed it, or it might be still in my house. I have done some work for the Government, and the amount ($150) appears in the assets. I have not received more than that. I have an entry of $200 for work for the Surveyor General, but I did not do that work and have never received that money. According to the book I received $173 in December 1876, and the expenditure was $53. The balance was used to pay bills which I have not entered. The accounts filed in Court are made up some from memory and others from notes. According to the accounts, I never paid more than what I received. I spent more than I received. To meet the excess in expenditure over receipts, I have been compelled to borrow money, and to pay the loans I borrowed more money. I did not enter the money I borrowed.

The witness was somewhat closely examined with regard to his receipts and payments the object being to show that the accounts put in were not reliable. In answer to the Court the bankrupt stated that of the $400 he owed to Mr. Favre, a great part of it was for drinks and for billiard-playing with Mr. Favre himself, Mr. Favre being a better player than he was.

Mr. Wotton again urged that the bankrupt had so monstrously misbehaved himself that he thought he was not entitled to any protection. The accounts were "cooked," and he had admitted that he spent more than he received. Moreover, he had committed gross perjury in swearing that the books which were brought here were brought by him from Saigon. He would have persisted in saying that, only he saw the Chinese book-binder in Court. He then altered his statement, thus admitting by his own words that he had committed perjury. He had also admitted that he was in the company of bad women, and nobody could suppose that he spent no money on their account.

Mr. Donny then replied and said they heard everything that could be said against the bankrupt, and the chief thing in his disfavour was that he had committed perjury. Now, there were three books, one of which was brought by him from Saigon, and when the question was asked him, it was not unnatural that he should make a mistake in his answer. The mere look of the other two books was sufficient to convince any one that they were made in Hongkong. For this mistake alone, he urged, the bankrupt's discharge should not be refused, unless it was shown that he was guilty of fraud or breach of trust. No fraud was here shown, and the trust he had done was that he had been foolish, like many men in his position, in living beyond his means. That was not a sufficient ground to refuse a man his discharge. There had been here a case of a Parsee bankrupt who was in the habit of going over to Macao and gambling, and yet he was granted his discharge. The present bankrupt was a very good lithographer, so much so that he was even employed by the Government, and if he had been allowed the opportunity he would have paid off his debts, but he was pressed and put in gaol. His employment, therefore, entirely ceased, and he was prevented from carrying out the orders he had in hand. As to the accounts, Mr. Wotton had gone over them very carefully, and he had not been able to lay his hands on any one of the entries as being false. As to his being in bad company, he said that most men in his position would do, and he had said that he did not spend any money, and there was nothing to contradict it.

His Lordship said that on examining the accounts, he found the state of things to be this: that out of 18 entries, the largest item was $400, that due to Mr. Favre the next amount was $240, and the next large amount was $160 for rent, the rest being made up of small sums amounting to about $260. Now with the exception of one, not one of the creditors had come forward to oppose, and it might thus be assumed that the debts were properly contracted. It was certainly curious that the balances of receipts and expenditure were exactly alike, but that did not show that he did not account for all the moneys he received; at any rate there was no evidence to prove it. As to his leading an immoral life, it was a disreputable thing for any one to do, but he said he did not spend any money and there was nothing to show that he did. His Lordship thought that better way would be to postpone the last examination for one week, in the meantime, the bankrupt would see what he could do with the orders in hand. The bankrupt was to receive any money due to him and to render an account.

Adjourned for one week accordingly.

China.

On the banks of the city-moat, there is a little, dirty, ramshackle sort of a shop, whose principal stock-in-trade consists, apparently, of the carcases of wild beasts. There may be seen hanging on its walls, the skins and skeletons of tigers and other animals of the cat tribe—leopards and so forth—and also those of alligators. In answer to enquiries the shopkeeper replies that he gets the greater portion of these animals from "the hills beyond Hangchow"; but how far, or in what direction, they are to be found, he appears a little uncertain. He says, however, that tiger-skinning is a regular trade, and that if any body wants specimens of any of the animals referred to, it is only necessary to give the requisite orders to the men who supply his shop. It is rather puzzling, at first, to imagine for what purpose he requires these gigantic articles of merchandise. He does not keep a curiosity-shop—that is certain. He is not a naturalist, nor is he an anatomist, nor a taxidermist. The trade which he professes is now obsolete in England,—that is, in the form in which it still exists in China. He is a druggist; and the bones, and skins, and other portions of the beasts in which he deals, are used in the preparation of medicines.

A Visit to the Woosung forts is just now far from being without interest. The various camps stationed there aggregate no fewer than six thousand men, and the fortifications are about complete. There are at present ten Krupp guns in position, pointing across the river; an eleventh is in course of being placed, pointing down stream, in the direction of Buck Island. The armaments, looks strongly defended with French iron plates, and there is no doubt that the event of hostilities foreign men-of-war would find the forts extremely disagreeable. The organization appears to be perfect, and the discipline among the soldiery is severe. Only yesterday, a soldier who had committed some irregularity among the neighbouring villagers was strung up by the heels with the nape of his neck just touching the ground, and in this uncomfortable posture he was kept for just one hour. The light-house is also worth a visit. It is in admirable working order, and is frequently inspected by passers-by, to judge by the number of names inscribed in the visitors' book which is kept for the purpose. The only drawback, in fact, to the pleasure and interest of a ramble about Woosung, is the exceeding filth of the Woosung village itself. Picturesque as it looks from the river, with its gaudily-decorated and irregular buildings, it is really one of the most pestilential holes conceivable, and the stenches are enough to turn an ordinarily-civilised stomach quite sick.

(N. C. D. News.)

We hear that orders have been issued by some "large mandarin" in the North—presumably Li Hung-chang, from whom all things seem now to emanate—that junk trading between Shanghai and Tientsin are to carry red and green lights affixed, like our own sailing lights.—A gentleman in Shanghai was applied to the other day, by the owner of ten junks, to describe these lamps, where they should be placed, which colour on which side, &c., and announced that he was going to procure them and have them ready against the re-opening of the Peiho. The other junk-owners will have to follow suit, we presume, by the same time; and the danger of collisions which is so frequent under present system will be thus greatly diminished. Of course, if they can, the Chinese will exhibit their lights on English ships are so constructed now that the lamps will not go in their place otherwise than properly. In any case the appearance of lights will show steamers that there is some object which is not a steamer, and which it is their business to avoid; and we know too well how very imperfectly the old system of burning paper, or of waving or hoisting a feeble Chinese lantern, conveyed this warning.

INSURRECTION IN JAPAN.

(Japan Mail.)

The alarming news from Satsuma has, during the past few days, engendered the public attention to the almost entire exclusion of every other subject. The vagueness of the thousand and one reports published in the native press, and repeated at every corner, the impossibility of obtaining any reliable information whatever, and the mystery with which every incident connected with the outbreak is enshrouded, supply matter for the wildest conjectures, and give good cause for the general uneasiness. There can be no question, however, of the extreme perturbation of the Government, rendered the more evident by the secrecy it endeavours to preserve with regard to the outbreak, while at the same time it cannot conceal the open measures it is taking for its own protection. The telegraph is jealously guarded, none but official messages being allowed to be transmitted. Large bodies of troops and of policemen are being sent south as fast as steamers can be got ready to transport them. One of the finest vessels of the Japanese navy is ordered to take up her position at Shingawra. At all the Government establishments the guards have been largely reinforced. Most of the higher officials of the Government, in obedience to telegraphic summons, have left for Kito, the only ministers remaining being Iwakura, Udagawa, Okuma, Minister of Finance, and Ogi, Minister of Justice. There is thus evidently occasion for extraordinary and vigorous action, and it is natural that men should be induced to think the worst.

Without, however, taking the pessimist view of matters, judging from what we see of preparation, and from the little truth that we can disentangle from the mass of rumour, there can be no doubt that the present is the most serious difficulty which the Government has had to encounter since it was established. The Sate rebellion, and more recently, that headed by Hayabara, in which he sacrificed his own and so many valuable lives, in a rash attempt to overthrow a Government which he had himself helped to establish, and from which he imagined he had suffered personal wrongs, were to a certain extent alarming, but the difficulties to which they gave rise were altogether unimportant when compared with those which threaten the country from the present attitude of Satsuma; difficulties, in which the Government has, apparently, quietly allowed itself to be involved, and from which we fear it will require all its craft and all its vigour to extricate itself.

We will take a brief review of the events which have culminated in the present crisis. For some time past, there has been established in Kagoshima an institution popularly known as a "Private School" or College. This school was founded by General Saigō and other leading men of the Satsuma clan, and supported by them out of the pensions allotted to them by the Government in acknowledgement of their services on its behalf. Although ostensibly established for the purpose of general education, it is actually nothing less than a military academy. The pupils number, it is supposed, some thousands, comprise the flower of the Satsuma men, and are a remarkably robust and well-trained body. Among these pupils are nearly all the men, soldiers and policemen, who were in Saigō's command during the time he was in the Imperial service, and who, almost to a man, accompanied him to his home when he resigned his position. Here then is the making of a formidable army, and it is strange, to say the least, that if Saigō and the leading men in Satsuma are anxious to cultivate only the arts of peace, they should be at such pains and expense to found and support an academy on a gigantic scale to teach thoroughly all the arts of war. At Sakura Shima, a place distant a few miles from Kagoshima, is a powder manufactory, where has been stored a large amount of powder, and it is said, other ammunition, which the Government was naturally desirous to remove from so dangerous a neighbourhood and to get into its own custody. The necessity of keeping this ammunition in their own hands led to an act of resistance on the part of the more impatient of the samurai, which compelled the disclosure of a plot that has long been preparing, but which its originators would have preferred to conceal until all was ready for its consummation. This may account for the conduct of some of the leaders of Satsuma, who are reported to be holding themselves aloof from the movement, as they see that the success of their designs is impeded by the headstrong actions of their hot-headed followers.

That Satsuma should maintain the position of defiance towards the administration that she has always assumed, we do not believe. She can, from her present stronghold, for a long time hold at bay the forces that the Government may be compelled to send against her in their endeavours to reduce her to submission. The country is almost unapproachable by an invading army by land, and the fortifications at Kagoshima and on the coast have been so strengthened, that they are too formidable for the present navy to venture an attack. Moreover, it is not an undisciplined mob of boys, or a few thousand farmers, with flails, and matchlocks, and bamboo spears, that have to be encountered, but an army, hardy and well drilled, and as well officered as the Imperial troops—it may be as well armed. The movement is not the outcome of a week, and there is every reason to suppose that abundance of arms and ammunition has been collected for, in addition to permitting the establishment of a military school, the Government has never dared to let that the Satsuma Arsenal be handed over,—moreover there may be traitors in the Imperial camp, and this is what we believe the Government most fears. More than half of its officials are Satsuma men, while the navy is largely manned and officered by members of the disaffected clan. Can the Government count on their fidelity to the extent of sending them against their clansmen? We think not. There is an ominous little paragraph in the Japanese papers to the effect that the Government will attempt to settle the difficulty without having recourse to Army or Navy. Why does the Government temporize? Why does it not send all its forces against this turbulent clan as it did against Sate and Kunamoto, as it does against any clan less powerful than Satsuma? The troops that have already left are said to be only for the Emperor's protection. The answer seems plain. Satsuma's influence is too great, and too diffused, to permit the Government to use force except as a last resource.

On the other hand it is known that there are in the Satsuma clan two parties. The present outbreak is said to have proceeded from what is called the more advanced party, and that their impetuosity has thus urged forward a crisis, which the cooler heads intended to delay as long as possible, and which it was hoped, by means of calm representation and discussion of the required reforms, to have altogether avoided. In that case the house is divided against itself, and if this be so, the division will greatly aid the Government. There is still another strong point in its favour. Satsuma is no favourite with her sister provinces. She has too often been faithless to them; too often induced them to plunge into deep water, and then, standing quietly on the bank, calmly witnessed their drowning struggles. It is even believed that Maybara and his misguided followers were among these victims of Satsuma's infidelity to her friends. Be that as it may, there is a want of confidence in her which will prevent those who would like to join issue with her against the existing administration from lending their support, and this distrust is another point and a strong one in favour of the Government. Should she however be able to prove her power to sustain the position she has assumed, there can be little doubt that she will be largely assisted in her rebellion by the samurai of other provinces, and the country plunged into a civil war, of which no one can pretend to tell the issue.

BILLIARDS.

(Liberal Review.)

This is one of the most fascinating of games. It is also one of the most scientific. Of those which are played indoors it is certainly the most healthy, as it imposes a moderate amount of physical exertion upon its votaries. Yet there are people who regard it with the greatest horror, it being in their eyes, associated with every description of iniquity. In their opinion, when a young man begins to handle a cue, he takes the first step towards destruction; and when he bolts with his master's cash-box they seem to imagine that he has merely concluded his career in a betting fashion. They have plenty of cases to cite in support of their theories. Somehow or other, it does appear that billiard-players, as a class, are rather a loose lot. If a young man drinks, or bets, or mixes in questionable company, the chances are that he also plays billiards. At the same time, it is but right to state that billiards do not necessarily lead to the things mentioned, although the things mentioned do seem to lead to billiards in a general way. Then many an adulated young man has the audacity to declare that he has been ruined through billiards; as if that statement were a partial excuse for the follies and vices of which he has been guilty. There may be little veracity in his allegation—probably the truth is that he has attempted to make his cue stand him the funds wherewith to help pay for his expensive amusements, and, in doing so, fallen a victim to cleverer hands than himself—but it has the effect of casting discredit upon the game. So, also, has the fact that the surroundings of billiards are anything but satisfactory. A public billiard-room is invariably a stifling, ill-ventilated place, and frequented by individuals of anything but a pleasant type. Stale smokers, who, having been floored themselves, are longing to prey upon others, and cunning vagabonds of low origin and low tastes find their way to it; and they soon rub the gilt off the more innocent beings who come in immediate contact with them. He must be a very strong-natured man who can frequent a billiard room of the worst kind and escape more or less contamination. If there is greed within him the place will bring it out, and in time he will learn to do things without hesitation which at the outset he performs with a sense of the deepest shame. He is taught by its influences to look after himself, and to care not a jot who else goes to the bad; lessons which, though very valuable from one point of view, are not likely to conduce to his permanent benefit in the highest sense. When all this can be written with truth—when it can be confidently stated that billiards are surrounded by a mass of vagabondage, knavery, dissipation, and other influences which tend to men's moral deterioration, and are calculated to place people in the greatest peril, we cannot be surprised that there are patriots who hold up their hands in disgust and condemn the game altogether.

While, however, it may be frankly admitted that the dealers of billiards have some apparent force upon their side, we are bound to strongly repudiate the theory that they are right in the main. There are not so many amusements open to the people that we can afford to throw away one which, as an amusement pure and simple, is among the best obtainable. To do so would be to give the vagabonds of the community a monopoly which they are certainly not entitled to. They have contrived to get the pastime of horse-racing pretty much into their own hands, and have degraded a noble sport as much, perhaps, as it is possible to degrade anything. No one is likely to disapprove the undisturbed enjoyment of the delights derivable from pigeon-shooting. Numerous places of public resort have been handed over to them. It is time, then, that a stand should be made; that it should be shown that because the vagabonds have desecrated a certain thing by laying their tainted hands upon it, it does not necessarily follow that henceforth that thing must not be touched by persons of the better sort. There has been enough of weak renunciation. Billiards, in particular, are among the things which should be rescued from the clutches of raceality. There is no earthly reason why they should be surrounded by evil influences. They can be played at home as well as abroad; they can be enjoyed in an atmosphere which does not reek with the stale fumes of strong drink; they can be dealt with scientifically in places which are not tenanted by frowsy-looking and rapacious "markers" and hungry hawkers. Of course, there are fools who cannot enjoy them or anything else at home, but these beings are unhappy in any place which is not morally unclean, and are plunged in misery when they are not plundering or being plundered, so it is not worth while to take much account of them. Probably, they will go to the bad whatever is done; and all that can be hoped is that they will do so without injuring others. But those simple-minded persons who really play the game for its own sake, not in order that they may fatten themselves at the expense of others, like it all the better when it is free from the vitiated atmosphere by which it is so often accompanied. They should be considered.

THE SEA SERPENT AGAIN.

At the Liverpool Police-court on the 9th inst. Captain George Drevor, of the barque Pauline, appeared before Mr. Raffles; the stipendiary magistrate, and asked that his worship would receive an affidavit signed by himself, his officers, and half of his crew as to their having seen the great sea serpent. He said his vessel had just arrived in the Mersey from Akyab after a voyage occupying altogether twenty months. They had sighted the great sea serpent on three different occasions, and it had evidently followed the ship, which, owing to a broad white streak around it, might have been mistaken by the sea serpent for another of its kind. Each time they saw the monster it was sporting itself by catching and crushing whales it felt its coils. The captain went on to state that he had been invited by several scientific societies in London to relate to them what he had seen of the monster, and as, hitherto supposed, fabulous creature, and he intended to proceed to London in a few days for that purpose. The affidavit was as follows:—"We the undersigned, captain, officers, and crew of the barque Pauline, of London, do solemnly and sincerely declare that on July 8, 1876, in lat. 5.13 S., long. 35 W., we observed three large sperm whales, and one of them was gripped around the body with two turns of what appeared to be a huge serpent. The head and tail appeared to have a length beyond the coils of about thirty feet and its girth eight or nine feet. The serpent whirled its victim round and round for about fifteen minutes, and then suddenly dragged the whale to the bottom head-first. Again, on the 13th July, a similar serpent was seen about 200 yards off, shooting itself along the surface, head and neck bent out of the water several feet. This was seen only by the captain and an ordinary seaman, George Drevor. A few moments afterwards it was seen elevated some sixty feet perpendicularly in the air. The affidavit-declaration concluded in the ordinary legal form.

NAPOLEON I. AND CZAR ALEXANDER.

Alexander wrote to Napoleon, "I offer you the half of Europe, I will help you to obtain it, secure you in the possession of it, and all I ask in return is the possession of a single strait, which is also the key of my house." Napoleon, according to O'Meara, in his "Voice from St. Helena," replied thus:—"In the course of a few years Russia will have Constantinople, the greatest part of Turkey, and all Greece. This I hold to be as certain as if it had already taken place. Almost all the cajoling and flatterings which Alexander practised towards me was to gain my consent to effect this object. I would not consent, foreseeing that the equilibrium of Europe would be destroyed. In the natural course of things, in a few years, Turkey must fall to Russia. The greatest part of her population are Greeks, whom you may say are Russian. The Powers it would injure, and who would oppose it, are England, France, Prussia, and Austria. It will be very easy for Russia to engage Austria's assistance by giving her Servia and other provinces bordering upon the Austrian dominions which extend towards Constantinople. The only hypothesis that France and England may ever be allied with sincerity will be in order to prevent this. But even this alliance will not avail. France, England, and Prussia united cannot prevent it. Russia and Austria can at any time effect it. Once mistress of Constantinople, Russia gets all the commerce of the Mediterranean, becomes a great naval power, and God knows what may happen. She quarrels with you (England), marches off to India an army of seventy thousand good soldiers, which to Russia is nothing, and a hundred thousand cavaliers, Cossacks, and others, and England loses India. Above all the other Powers, Russia is the most to be feared, especially by you. Her soldiers are braver than the Austrians, and she has means of raising as many as she pleases. In bravery the French and English soldiers are the only ones to be compared to them. All this I foresee. I see into futurity farther than any other, and I wanted to establish a barrier against those barbarians by re-establishing the kingdom of Poland, and putting Poniatowski at the head of it as king; but your imbeciles of ministers would not consent. A hundred years hence I shall be praised, and Europe, especially England, will lament that I did not succeed. When they see the finest countries in Europe overrun and a prey to those northern barbarians they will say, 'Napoleon was right.'—Colburn's New Monthly Magazine.

RUSSIAN CAVALRY.

Dragoons, Cossacks and the rank and file of Russian regiments are armed with Berdan rifles. Cuirassiers, Uhlans, and the front rank of Hussar regiments have revolvers. A front rank of Cuirassiers and Hussars, and all Uhlans and Cossacks have lances. The Cossacks have no lance flags. The sabres of the Cuirassiers are longer than those of other cavalry. All non-commissioned officers and trumpeters carry only sabres and revolvers. The drill of the cavalry has been much improved and modernised lately; still much remains to be done. Much has been said of the special aptitude of the Cossacks for reconnoitring and outpost duty, but the want of education of their officers must always be a drawback to the efficient performance of these difficult and important services. The Russian officers display great zeal in the drill and military education of their men, and have lately instituted cavalry staff journeys, on the pattern of those undertaken by German officers, which have shown very good results. One of the latest innovations in drill was the swimming across the Dniester at the camp of Bender by a regiment of Cossacks, which was effected in perfect safety and with great regularity. For a campaign in a difficult country the Russian cavalry is admirably fitted, as their horses are possessed of great strength and durability, and in a campaign in any country they would show themselves enemies not to be despised by the best and most experienced troops in Europe.—Daily News.

A Mr. FERGUSON writes us (News Letter) that there is a coolness among the boarders at the farmhouse where he resides, and he proposes to do the rural this Summer. It is not because the steak is the usual Indian-rubber country article, or because the cow is forever giving out, or from any of the ordinary boresome incidents. It seems that Mr. F., though a bachelor, is very fond of children. Mrs. Smith, who is one of the boarders, went driving the other day, and as a particular mark of confidence left her eighteen-months-old baby with him until her return. To amuse the little cherub Mr. Ferguson tied it firmly, but comfortably, to the end of a pole, and held it up where it could snuck the ripe plums on the tree in the orchard. He did this, he says, because he understood that ripe fruit was good for children. After a few hours spent in this way the mother returned, and instead of laughing at Mr. F.'s ingenuity has abused him like a pickpocket ever since. All babies have coo now and then, Mr. F. is informed, and he sees no reason for Mr. S.'s huffing around and calling him an "assassin" and things like that.
